Introduction

Nitrogen is abundant on Earth and essential for sustaining life, but due to its low reactivity, the available nitrogen resources were limited. However, with the development of the Haber-Bosch process in the early 20th century, industrial production of ammonia from nitrogen became possible, and solving the problem of nitrogen resource constraints. At the same time, there are concerns that excessive use of nitrogen is adversely affecting the environment and exceeding the limits of the Earth's system. In response to these issues, the United Nations Environment Assembly (UNEA) has adopted a resolution on sustainable nitrogen management, and the Kunming-Montreal Global Biodiversity Framework has set a goal of "halving excess nutrients". Japan has taken the lead globally by formulating the "Japanese National Action Plan on Sustainable Nitrogen Management," and it is expected that specific efforts for sustainable nitrogen management will progress through the refinement of nitrogen inventories and the consolidation of scientific knowledge.

Regarding nitrogen inventories, scientific knowledge has been accumulated in Europe and the United States through initiatives such as the International Nitrogen Initiative (INI), but knowledge outside these regions is scarce, limited to research in a few countries like Japan. Additionally, while existing nitrogen inventories have made detailed estimates in the agricultural sector, the availability in other sectors such as wastewater and waste is low, particularly lacking knowledge on the behavior of nitrogen in domestic wastewater.

For Japan, there are two major technical challenges in refining the nitrogen inventory for domestic wastewater. First, because Japan has various domestic wastewater management systems tailored to local conditions, refining the nitrogen inventory requires quantitatively understanding the behavior of nitrogen at each sanitation facility. Second, the estimation of domestic nitrogen loads in designated water bodies for the total load regulation is based on the unit load method, but the method for setting unit loads is not standardized. Moreover, the bottom-up approach based on local surveys is effective for specific regions but difficult to apply to multiple and wide-ranging areas.

Therefore, we have developed a top-down model based on statistical data, applied it to Japan's municipalities, and estimated the nitrogen inflow for each sanitation facility over the past 15 years. We hope that by publishing these results as "NIMPO-SISF (Ver. 2024)," they will be widely utilized by researchers and scientists, as well as municipalities, companies, and other diverse stakeholders.

Method

(1) Calculation of nitrogen inflow by sanitation facility

Nitrogen inflow into each sanitation facilities  $n_{(y,r,s)}$  are calculated with the product of per capita nitrogen intake  $c_{(y,r)}$  and population by sanitation facilities  $p_{(y,r,s)}$  as equation (1).

where  $y$ ,  $r$ ,  $s$  are denoted as year, region, and a type of sanitation facilities, respectively.

a) Estimation of per capita nitrogen intake

The protein ingested into the body is metabolized and eventually excreted as nitrogen through feces, urine, sweat, hair, and skin. It is generally considered that adults excrete the same amount of nitrogen as they ingest<sup>1</sup>. However, children in their growth period and pregnant women are expected to accumulate nitrogen in their bodies due to the development of muscles and bones and the need for lactation<sup>1</sup>. Since it is difficult to obtain reliable data on these groups, the per capita nitrogen intake is estimated under the assumption that the population consists of typical adults.

The per capita nitrogen intake as  $c(y, r)$  is defined as the total nitrogen intake annually, and is assumed that all nitrogen intake is excreted through the body's protein metabolism process. The per capita nitrogen supply is calculated by multiplying the protein intake rate by the per capita nitrogen supply. The per capita nitrogen supply is derived from FAOSTAT (<https://www.fao.org/faostat/en>; accessed on 4 September, 2023) by extracting the protein supply per capita per day (g/person/day) for Japan by food type (87 types), and multiplying the nitrogen content rate of each food type (15.7–18.9%)<sup>2</sup> by the number of days in the year (365 or 366 days), and summing these values.

The protein intake rate is calculated by dividing the national average protein intake per capita per day (g/person/day), extracted from the National Health and Nutrition Survey (https://www.mhlw.go.jp/bunya/kenkou/kenkou\_eiyou\_chousa.html; accessed on 4 September 2023), by the protein supply per capita per day. This gives the national intake rate (76–81%). To reflect regional differences in protein intake, a regional coefficient (0.92–1.08) is defined by dividing the average protein intake per capita per day for each region (12 regions; Table 1) from the National Health and Nutrition Survey by the national average. Finally, the protein intake rate for each municipality is calculated by multiplying the national protein intake rate by the regional coefficient.

Table 1 Regional Classification of the National Health and Nutrition Survey in Japan

Regional name	Prefectures (Hepburn style)
Hokkaido	Hokkaido
Tohoku	Aomoriken, Iwateken, Miyagiken, Akitaken, Yamagataken, Fukushimazen
Kanto II	Ibarakiken, Tochigiken, Gummaken, Yamanashiken, Naganoken
Kanto I	Saitamaken, Chibaken, Tokyo, Kanagawaken
Hokuriku	Niigataken, Toyamaken, Ishikawaken, Fukuiken
Tokai	Gifuken, Shizuokaken, Aichiken, Mieken
Kinki II	Shigaken, Naraken, Wakayamaken
Kinki I	Kyotofu, Osakafu, Hyogoken
Chugoku	Tottoriken, Shimaneken, Okayamaken, Hiroshimaken, Yamaguchiken
Shikoku	Tokushimaken, Kagawaken, Ehimeken, Kochiken
Kitakyushu	Fukuokaken, Sagaken, Nagasakiken, Oitaken
Minamikyushu	Kumamotoken, Miyazakiken, Kagoshimaken, Okinawaken

b) Municipal population by sanitation facility

The municipal population using each sanitation facility  $p_{(y,r,s)}$  is based on the sewage treatment population data from the statistical tables of the General Waste Treatment Survey Results (https://www.env.go.jp/recycle/waste\_tech/ippan/stats.html; Accessed on 6 September 2023). The sanitation facilities are classified as Table 2. In addition, data which we could find error are corrected and the approaches are mentioned at the column of “Notes” in NIMPO-SISF.

Table 2 Category of sanitation facilities for Japan

Category code	Category name
SF01	Public sewerage
SF02	Sewage purification tank (SPT)
SF03	Combined type SPT
SF04	Community plant
SF05	Vault toilet
SF_T	Total

Notes: The other SPT can be calculated by subtracting SF03 from SF02.

c) Condition and limitation

To understand the trends in nitrogen excretion and inflow to sanitation facilities in Japan, time-series data is required. However, due to limitations in data availability, the target period is set from 2005 to 2019. The data for protein (nitrogen) supply per capita, protein intake rate, and population for each year were referenced. Additionally, considering the administrative entities within the country, the spatial resolution was set at the municipal level.

Notes: The municipal code for the Tokyoto23Ku, the 23 Special Wards of Tokyo, is independently defined by the author and is not defined by the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications. In addition, the above table repeats the same code for Tokyoto23Ku because the original data define two different names for Tokyoto23Ku in Japanese.
